the police of this city with amaring facility. The infamous miscreant who siew little Viola Beylan is still free, and the death of fourteen-year-old Amelia Staffeldt, the called who was stabbed to death on the old Seliz farm in Elmhurst, goes unpunished of the law.

In the Staffeldt case the police made a great parade of the arrest of Henry Becker, the stumpy, half-witted tramp, who was willing to confess to all the misders committed within a decade. The Grand Jury has refused to indict Becker on filmsy police evidence and has own incoherent confession. He will be discharged from custody on Saturday in the Queens County Court.

Emboldened by the seeming immunity enjoyed after the commission of such terrible crimes, attacks of the Kind are becoming more and more frequent. Only last night nine-year-old Susie Clark, the daughter of Thomas Ciark, of No. 1834 Avenue A, was attacked by Jamens man and narrowly escaped with her life.

Her assallant is described as a tall to indict Becker to the police of the wires with her life.

The third degree was not relaxed for days and the defectives wring enough confessions from the big eared little man to hang a regiment.

Physicians examined the man in the Queens County Jall and found his feedle mind giving way. The police were warned to let him alone. Then when arraigned before Magistrate Country of the ordeal and began a series of confessions, that became more and more laborate in detail. The third degree was not relaxed for days and the defectives wring enough confessions from the big eared little man to hang a regiment.

The police were reciting from a book. Magistrate Connorton asked him:

The police replied Becker. This was how the case stood when it went before the Grand Jury and was thrown out:

Her assaliant is described as a tall young man wearing a new straw hat young man wearing a new straw hat carrying a black derby in a bundle under his arm. He lured the little girl to No. 1712 First avenue dragged her through the hallway, then picking her up bodily sprang through the door leading to the cellar.

Women's Screams Saved This One.

A woman in the house saw the man disappear with the child. She hurried down from her apartment and found the child being strangled by the rufflan. She screamed and other women screamed. This frightened the man and he dashed away, and the child was probably saved from a fate similar to that of Viola Boylan. Beyond a bruised little girl was not harmed.

little girl was not harmed. The police, after investigating the at-fack upon the Clark obild, constructed the theory that her assailant was the murderer of the little Roylan girl, who of size nine years old, and who was lied in an indescribably brutal manr in the cellar of No. 2290 Second ave-
